

Liberal Neoliberalism in Hungary

Anikó Gregor (Eötvös Loránd University)
"A Neoliberal Gender Regime without Gender Studies: The Case of Hungary"

Zoltán Pogácsa (University of West Hungary)
"How Neoliberalism Has Led to the Rise of Right-Wing Populism"

Monday, April 29
2-4 p.m.
reception follows
AB 6051

Anikó Gregor is Assistant Professor of Gender Studies, Department of Social Research Methods, Faculty of Sociology, Eötvös Loránd University, Budapest, Hungary. Among her many articles, with Grzebalska Weronika, "Thoughts on the contested relationship between neoliberalism and feminism," in Solidarity in Struggle - Feminist Perspectives on Neoliberalism in East-Central Europe, ed. Eszter Kovats (Bonn 2016); and, with Hotakka Niko, "Young and Easily Allured? A Comparative Analysis on the Relationship between Populism and Youth in Europe" (2014).

Zoltán Pogácsa is Head of the Institute of Economics, Faculty of Economics, University of West Hungary, Sopron. He is author of six books, including Magyarország politikai gazdaságtana - Az északi modell esélyei [Hungary's Political Economy - The Chances of the Northern Model] (2016); The Political Economy of the Greek Crisis (2014); and Heterodox International Political Economy (2011). He is a frequent international public commentator on European integration and economic development.